This number stems from an estimated total population of 7,503,828,180. You might think that the number of males in the world is equal to the number of females. Research suggests otherwise. A report by the BBC states that since record-keeping began in 1830, there have been more males than females born every year. In fact, the birth ratio is 107 boys for every 100 girls.Balancing the Scales No one can say for sure why there is an imbalance between male and female births. One theory is that the skewed birth ratio is nature's way of ensuring an even balance of males to females in adulthood. Males are more likely than females to die at all stages of life, but especially in childhood. Males are bigger risk-takers. They are more likely to die from accidents, suicide and illness. Gender Selection Social reasons also influence the gender imbalance. In some countries in Asia and the Middle East, there is a strong preference for having sons rather than daughters. Females are often aborted in the womb, resulting in a higher birth ratio of boys. It's in the Chromosomes The sex of the baby is determined by the father's chromosomes. When the sperm carries an X chromosome, it combines with the mother's X chromosome to make a baby girl. If the sperm is carrying a Y chromosome, it makes a baby boy. There are many factors that may influence whether or not the X or Y chromosome sperm unites with the egg, including nutrition, environment and timing. None of these are proven to have any significant effect. In the end, it boils down to chance. Determining Factors There are a lot of rumors about things that may increase your odds of having a boy or a girl. But professionals agree that there is no scientific way a parent can control the gender of their unborn child. Nevertheless, studies have proven that a man's own family tree may hint at whether or not he will have boys or girls. A 2008 study from Newcastle University found that a man with more brothers is likely to have more male children. A man with more sisters is likely to have daughters. Moving into Adulthood While there are more boys born than girls, by the time these children reach adulthood the ratio thins out to about 105 boys to 100 girls. Worldwide the numbers are close to even. But in countries like China and India, there is still an imbalance due to a strong preference for males at birth. In 2016, the Washington Post reported that there are 70 million more men than women in these countries. MORE FROM REFERENCE.COM Your son's new favorite sweatshirt! I started drafting this story a week before Mother's Day, buzzing from how the internet coalesced around Teddy Riley and Babyface and excited to watch Erykah Badu and Jill Scott battle it out. Amid the coronavirus outbreak, these Verzuz battles were reminding me of how vital it is for black people to experience joy. It's a secret ingredient to black resilience, in my opinion.At the time, my primary motivation for writing this was compensatory. It's well documented that black and brown people are at greater risk of death from COVID-19. I wanted to talk about how joy has to be part of black health too, and how finding these moments of lightness can help us persevere. Inevitably, when the conversation turns toward black folks enjoying themselves, someone suggests that it's a distraction from larger issues. But happiness and levity have quantifiable health benefits, and I was ready to discuss them.Then I heard about Ahmaud Arbery, the 25-year-old man gunned down while jogging near his Georgia home in February. And news tumbled in of Breonna Taylor, a 26-year-old EMT in Kentucky who died in March after being shot by police while she slept in bed. Processing racism alongside a pandemic left me far more exhausted than joyful.I still believe that joy is an integral part of black well-being, and I'm not the first person to say this. Audre Lorde wrote eloquently about how caring for oneself is an act of resistance. There's also the Black Joy movement, sprouted alongside Black Lives Matter, which celebrates the happiness, playfulness, and freedom that undergird social justice. Adrienne Maree Brown's 2019 anthology, Pleasure Activism: The Politics of Feeling Good, gives a nudge toward understanding the power inherent in being delighted. While I'm not the first to say that joy, creativity, and even eroticism are necessary components of black health, I lend my voice to the chorus because we're facing overwhelming challenges, and the things that sustain us—no matter how small or playful—should never be discounted.This notion that joy fortifies isn't just philosophical. A 2019 meta-analysis published in the Annual Review of Public Health found associations between affective well-being (defined as joy and seeking pleasure) and lowered stress hormones like cortisol. (Overproduction of cortisol from chronic stress can contribute to a host of ailments from heart disease to depression, the Mayo Clinic says.) There's evidence that laughter, thanks to its stress-relieving effects, can help support your immune system, among other benefits. And, since this piece was inspired by Instagram battles, it's worth noting that a consistent habit of dancing (hopefully swaying in your seat is included) does count as exercise and, as such, can nurture the parts of the brain that have to do with memory, planning, and organizing, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says. There's also some evidence that listening to music might help reduce chronic pain thanks to the power of distraction, the National Institutes of Health explains. And a 2017 meta-analysis published in Perspectives of Public Health found an encouraging link between listening to music (as well as singing it) and improved mood in adults of all ages. My point? Joy isn't a distraction—it's nourishment. It's part of where some of us find the energy to continue thriving.
